

Myartspace launches “The Daily Art Feed” – Highlighted contemporary art work each day

Myartspace.com, the premier online social network for the art world is pleased to announce a new free service to art collectors, curators, appreciators, educators and artists – “The Daily Art Feed”.

New York, NY and Palo Alto, CA (PRWEB) March 11, 2008 -- myartspace.com, the premier online social network for the art world, has launched an exciting new offering “The Daily Art Feed”. This service is free and available to all and provides a new contemporary piece of art to be viewed each day. The art can be delivered in one of three ways – through a daily email message, our Facebook widget, or through the RSS feed.

Catherine McCormack-Skiba, Founder and Creative Director at myartspace noted “We have a growing base of art dealers, collectors and appreciators on our site – whether they be in New York, London and Los Angeles. This group is looking for new vehicles to better view and appreciate the very wide range of high quality contemporary art on the myartspace site. Our Daily Art Feed offering really helps address this need.”

Brian Sherwin, Senior Editor at myartspace adds “With more than 90 million users on Facebook alone, and the broad range of collectors actively engaged in the contemporary art market, artists have a unique opportunity to elevate their awareness in the public unlike any time in the past. The Daily Art Feed is one more piece of that puzzle to the community.”

People interested in signing up for The Daily Art Feed can do so starting today. Artists and Art Appreciators can sign up by clicking to <http://www.myartspace.com/daily>.
